Council Votes Down, For Now, Lowering City's Voting Age

by Kathleen Gallagher

In July 2015, the city's Youth Advisory Committee (YAC) sent a report to the city council recommending that the voting age be lowered to 16 for purposes of municipal elections. The committee also conducted a survey of Greenbelt young people in which 87 percent of respondents favored lowering the age. The councils of three other cities in the area have taken action to lower their minimum voting ages to 16: Takoma Park, Hyattsville and Glenarden.

After two years of discussion, during which the original petitioners had grown old enough to vote without a change in the law, council decided at its August 14 meeting on a 3 to 4 vote not to support the adoption of a charter amendment to make that change for Greenbelt. It had seemed at meetings in May and July (see the May 25 and July 13 issues of this paper) that council might support lowering the voting age while maintaining the currently existing minimum age of 18 for running for the city council. At the August 14 meeting, however, four councilmembers took the position that it was not acceptable for council to make such a change without the support of the voters as indicated by a referendum question to be placed on the ballot in the November 7 election.

Three councilmembers voted to support adoption of the charter change, including Judith Davis, Konrad Herling and Leta Mach. Mayor Emmett Jordan and Councilmembers Silke Pope, Edward Putens and Rodney Roberts did not want to take action on the matter without a referendum to support such action.

Since in Maryland it is the responsibility of elected officials to determine legislation, such a decision cannot be made directly by the voters. It appears unlikely that a majority of current councilmembers would support the change if the voters did not do so. It will be the council elected on November 7, however, that will decide how to proceed with the results of the vote on the referendum question.

In addition to the YAC itself, which recommended the change to council, the two other city council advisory groups to which council referred the issue, the Community Relations Advisory Board and the Advisory Committee on Education, supported the recommendation of YAC without reservation.

Herling said he had been swayed in part by the support of the advisory groups. Their opinion stood in contrast to the results of a question on the 2015 Community Questionnaire, which showed 77 percent of respondents opposing lowering the voting age.

Several residents spoke at the meeting before the vote was taken. Ema Smith, chair of YAC, has attended all of the meetings on this topic with other representatives from the committee. On this occasion, the former chair of the committee, Katia Cavigelli, under whose name the original report was submitted in 2015,

Herling Not Running

City Councilmember Konrad Herling announced at the August 14 council meeting that he will not run for re-election in November. Herling, who has started a graduate program in city planning, said he wants to focus his attention on learning to create new Greenbelts.

Herling, who has been on the council since 2003, will continue in office until the next council is sworn in on November 13.

Children Collaborative Art Involves Hundreds of Kids

by Elizabeth Gardner

Wooden butterflies are hanging in the Community Center gallery.

One of the many art projects that the Creative Kids Camps (CKC) completed this summer is a three-dimensional gallery work called Flutter. The project, which is now on display at the Community Center, comprises hanging butterflies of the many different species found in Maryland, filling the room with color and movement. They hang at various heights so that visitors of all sizes can be face-to-face with the delicate flapping wings. The project was started by the first session of campers, and added to by all of the campers that came through the CKC program this summer, making it an evolving work of art that showcases the talent of hundreds of children working together.

Nicole DeWald, arts supervisor for the Greenbelt Recreation Department, spearheaded the project. She believes that this project is beneficial to the children because it "provides campers an opportunity to create visual art in a way that is very different from what most of them have experienced previously."

The three-dimensional aspect of the display allows for a unique artistic style that can be used to showcase the strengths of all different children. Those who are talented at two-dimensional artistic designs lend their hands to creating the individual butterflies. The display is then assembled into 3D kinetic pieces by volunteers Deborah Delcid and Jean Newcomb. This also encourages children to reach out of their artistic comfort zones and work in new ways.

Another aspect of this project is that it encourages cooperation and collaboration among the campers, both those who work together all day and those attending past and future camp sessions. According to DeWald, "They work shoulder to shoulder on the larger components, learning to communicate with their collaborators and to integrate their respective ideas." This teaches the important life skill of respectful collaboration, not

Jitender Dubey is Finalist For Service to America Medal

by Matt Arbach

"God is watching over me," says Dr. Jitender Dubey, a microbiologist with the Agricultural Research Service, when considering his life of many journeys and perseverance. A resident of Greenbelt since 1982, Dubey was named a finalist in July for this year's Samuel J. Heyman Service to America medal for his pioneering work of over 30 years in the understanding and control of three pernicious parasites that affect the spectrum of livestock, pets and sometimes humans. His work has saved many lives, both human and animal, and has been a boon to the livestock industry. One sees clearly that his work is his true calling and that he relishes the opportunity to give

Rings on Lake Park Tree Tell a Tale Spanning 140 Years

by Owen Kelley

Last week, the city cut down a large, dead tree on the northeast shore of Greenbelt Lake, which had started growing about 60 years before Greenbelt was founded. If you visit the stump of this double-trunked white oak tree, you can count 140 annual growth rings. The fact that this tree is double-trunked means that it might not have sprouted from an acorn 140 years ago, but instead it may have started life as a pair of "stump sprouts" that grew out of the stump of an even earlier tree.

This large tree is a reminder that at least part of Greenbelt was wooded even before the town was built. We know this because the Library of Congress has aerial photos from 1935 to 1937 that show many areas of Greenbelt with trees towering over the newly constructed townhomes. The forested areas in these photos extend to the shores of Greenbelt Lake and include parts of what is today the Forest Preserve between the Baltimore-Washington Parkway and the GHI woodlands east of Ridge Road.

Looking back further, a 1913 map of Prince George's County labels about half of

Letters to the Editor

Power To The People

I sing the praises of solar panels. Mine were given county approval last Tuesday. Then Pepco came on Thursday to install the net metering system and immediately let me generate my own power. Now my GHI home gets 20 to 35 kilowatt-hours most every day from my roof.

It cost a lot because I paid for them outright rather than leasing them. But that means that I keep all of the savings. They should be fully paid for in about seven years, because of tax credits. So the next 18 years of operation will be giving me free power.

If anyone wants to talk with me about how great it is, and how accommodating GHI is, my email is ByllJones@gmail.com.

Trail Needs Benches

Regarding the article by Jeff Lemieux in the News Review of Thursday, August 10, 2017, with the below photo of the “new connector trail [is] ready to be used,” allow me to make a comment regarding benches. People with physical limitations such as me need benches scattered along the way at reasonable intervals.

Due to a vascular accident, I can walk but only for short distances before having to stop and rest [on a bench]. Resting on the ground is out of the question, for serious reasons. I would adore taking my dogs for walks on the new trail, but as with many or most cityscapes, the able-bodied designers need to be aware of the need for resting places.

Can benches or even kiosks be recommended to be placed along the new trail as an integral part of ADA considerations? Thanks for your input.

Our Noble Quixote?

A decade after An Inconvenient Truth, Al Gore, America’s most visible ecowarrior, continues his crusade with An Inconvenient Sequel: Truth To Power. Gore is older, grayer, thicker and angrier but undaunted.

He demonstrates that extreme weather events make the deleterious impact of climate change much harder to deny. In this high stakes race against time, let’s hope that Gore is not merely some out of touch Don Quixote tilting against windmills (wind power?).

After the 8 p.m. showing at Old Greenbelt Theatre this Friday August 18, there will be an audience discussion led by Dr. Paul Butterworth, a scientist from the U.K. who worked at Greenbelt’s NASA Goddard Space Flight Center for 30 years.

Living Locally, Means Acting Globally to Local Church

by Jeff Warner

Maryland Christian Fellowship (MCF) Community Church in Greenbelt has been serving both locally and internationally since its founding in 2011. While church members have served those in need around the globe, they have focused their work in Nicaragua, one of the most impoverished nations in the Western Hemisphere. There they have served orphans and those in prison, helped provide food to nearly 1,000 children on a daily basis and participated in numerous social projects to help those in extreme need.

Although the Bible has been translated into their native language, Miskito, most cannot afford one – even the pastors. Most of the MCF team serving the Coco River region are Greenbelt residents. In one year, the team was able to provide a Bible in their native language to nearly every pastor in the communities along the 500-mile river border. MCF will provide Bibles to 230 of the 235 river communities and hopes to partner with locals to help serve the remaining five communities, which are located much further from the region. The MCF team must bring their own food and water. Disease abounds and medical help is literally days away. During the most recent MCF trip, the motor on the boat – a fiberglass shell with only a bench to sit on – began having problems early in the trip, hundreds of miles from help. The motor eventually died about 20 minutes from the end of the trip and the river current pushed the boat to the end point. While trying to repair the motor, a screw vital to the motor’s operation fell into the brown water’s strong current near the shoreline. Miraculously, after about 10 minutes of searching, the small screw was found.

Part of the journey requires traveling through white-water rapids. This area is so dangerous that during the recent trip an experienced military person’s boat overturned. His body was found many miles away at a location where the MCF team had spent the night. The team was surprised to wake up to military personnel who were escorting the body back home.

MCF Community Church (MCFcc.org) is a non-denominational, multicultural Christian church located here in Greenbelt. It meets every Sunday at Eleanor Roosevelt High School from 10 a.m. to 11:15 a.m. Jeff Warner is pastor of Maryland Christian Fellowship Community Church.

river. It will take at least three trips traveling hundreds of miles by water to complete this task. In addition, two international ministries – In Touch Ministries with Dr. Charles Stanley and Leading the Way with Dr. Michael Youssef – partnered with MCF to provide solar-powered audio Bibles since many in these communities can’t read their own language. There are many hazards in distributing Bibles to this remote

In 2016, a Nicaraguan pastor asked MCF Pastor and Greenbelt resident Jeff Warner to serve the indigenous Miskito people who live along the Coco River that borders Honduras and Nicaragua. MCF is one of few churches to ever visit the communities here. Surprisingly, there are almost exclusively Christian churches through this entire region and they are forgotten. Community leaders asked Warner to bring them Bibles for their churches.

This should be a timely topic for those who tend to collect too much genealogical data. The event is free and refreshments will be served.

Obituaries

The News Review publishes obituaries of Greenbelt residents, past or present. You write it or we will if you prefer. We try to include information about participation in various activities and organizations, where the person lived and something about the family. A photograph and service information should be included. There is no charge.

Condolences to the family and friends of Eugene “Gene” Krebs who died on Sunday, August 6 at the age of 94. Krebs was known for his frequent walks from Green Ridge House to Roosevelt Center to visit his many friends at the businesses there. He was also a long-time board member of the Greenbelt Federal Credit Union and occasionally played the part of Santa Claus. A memorial celebration of life will be held at a later date. Congratulations to Pat McCoy who, as of August 5, 2017, officially became a member of the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution. Congratulations to Greenbelt News Review carrier Kalen Wright who is recently back from the AAU National Taekwondo Championship held in Florida. He is currently ranked in the top 5 for 10- and 11-year-old Black Belts throughout the U.S. He attributes his success to the help of his family and friends and appreciates their support. His ultimate goal is competing in the 2026 Olympics. Please share your accomplishments, milestones and news in the Our Neighbors column. DUBEY continued from page 1 back to the world a portion of the luck and blessings that he has received.

The major focus of his work centers on the parasite, Toxoplasma gondii (T. gondii). First discovered in 1908, it wasn't until the 1940s that it was found to infect humans. It was seen to cause birth defects, such as large heads, mental retardation and blindness, and sometimes death. The 1950s saw the development of a test, which revealed that a third of humanity carried the infection. In the 1960s, undercooked meat was revealed as a conduit for infection. It was in the late 1960s that Dubey entered the scene and determined the primary life cycle and route of transference for the parasite: cats. Cats provide the sole breeding environment for the parasite, which they acquire through infected prey, such as rodents and birds. When cats excrete waste, the organism is released into the soil and water systems; it has even found its way into the oceans, where 65 percent of sea otters in the U.S. have been discovered to carry it. The organism causes spontaneous abortions in sheep and goats as well, greatly affecting those industries.

Dubey's work has led to many safeguards against T. gondii. Pregnant women especially should refrain from any contact with cat litter. Also, meat should be served fully cooked. He discovered that freezing meat prior to cooking will also kill the parasite. His work has contributed to many USDA safety parameters concerning food safety. Cleaning tools in scalding hot water of over 160 degrees also suppresses transmissions. He stressed that the organism in cat feces is almost indestructible and able to persist for weeks, even months. Thirty percent of the 150 million cats in the U.S. are exposed to it, yet a cat can only be infectious once in their lifetime.

In connection with this research, Dubey was able to differentiate two other parasites that were confused with T. gondii for many years. Neospora caninum gestates in dogs, and while harmless to humans, causes paralysis in canines and young dairy cows. Sarcocystis neurona, which manifests in the brain's neurons, was first found in horses, but is now recognized to exist in a broad range of land and marine mammals. The parasite has been especially significant in the horse industry, causing paralysis and sometimes death. His work has led to tests and control measures for both parasites.

Dubey's life began in a very remote and primitive village in India. Born into the priestly caste, he went against his parents' wishes for a career as a cleric and was enrolled in school by his uncle. Often unable to purchase books, he was nevertheless able to secure scholarships and rise to the top of his classes. In 1960, he received a degree in veterinary science and he began his study of parasites. He left India in 1964 for England with a scholarship to the University of Sheffield and in 1968 came to the U.S. as a post doc at the University of Kansas Medical Center, Kansas City. He currently works at the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center (BARC), under the aegis of the USDA.

With a SNAP Crackle and Pop Market Program Takes Off

by Cathie Meetre

The Greenbelt Farmers Market (GFM) celebrated its 10th season by rolling out its new capability to accept Supplementary Nutritional Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits. During this debut performance, coordinator and board member Carissa Ralbovsky and her team of SNAP volunteers, Alicia Baker, Brenda Velez and Marsha Voigt, braved the electronic complexities of Bluetooth and iPad to successfully deliver $81 of SNAP tokens, including $20 in matching market funding. The market hadn't extensively promoted the rollout as it was a soft launch intended as much as anything to ensure that the equipment worked, the vendors were educated on the program and the volunteers were able to use it successfully.

Apart from some early moments of panic when the electronics were temporarily not communicating successfully, all systems were go. The system proved easy to use and transactions were made without a hitch.

But the word had at least percolated to four recipients who were able to take advantage of the fresh produce at the market and were duly thanked for their role as guinea pigs. One participant, excited about the opportunity to shop at the market and delighted with the produce he bought even came back to purchase more tokens even though there was no match for these. Tokens were spent at seven of the vendors and participants spent all the tokens they received (tokens do not expire but they cannot be refunded and may only be used for eligible items).

Additional behind the scenes volunteers that have greatly contributed to putting together the system to accept SNAP benefits at the market, including the creation of a step-by-step procedure guide, include Suzette Agans, Mary Roth, Debbie Ashpes, Lori Martin, Stephen Isler and Shanai Browne, as well as members of the GFM board of directors.

The market is spreading the word among local shoppers that this program is available and that the market is matching the first $5 of SNAP tokens purchased on each market day (only one match per market day). Greenbelters can directly assist the program by either donating to it at the market or by donating online to the matching program at the market's website, greenbeltfarmersmarket.org. Readers who know a person who may benefit are encouraged to let them know of the opportunity.

present-day Greenbelt as either culled hardwood forest or culled pine forest. These forests likely started growing decades before 1913 because it takes decades for a fallow field or meadow to become a forest mature enough for selective timber harvesting. This map was produced by Fred Beasley of the Maryland Board of Forestry.

While photographing the stump of this 140-year-old oak last week, the author noted several other hardwood trees of comparable girth within sight of Greenbelt Lake.

Similarly, this spring, the author found several places within the Forest Preserve with oaks, maples and tulip poplars over 36 inches in diameter. These parts of the Forest Preserve look like a wild place, not a tame park. The Forest Preserve's character may be due to the fact that most of this land has been left alone to mature through natural processes, as far as we know, since the federal government purchased it in 1935.

Woods as old as Greenbelt's are somewhat unusual. In 2008, the U.S. Forest Service reported that 10 percent of Maryland's forests are over a century old and only 0.5 percent are over 140 years old.

Fun at the Festival: Enjoy the Rides, Games, Bands, Food

by Butch Hicks

Carnival rides light up the night at the 2016 Labor Day Festival.

Across America, Labor Day begets fairs, parades and foods more tasty than nutritious. In our piece of America each year, Greenbelt’s Labor Day Festival fair is announced by screaming riders on the Ferris wheel and merry-go-round, shouting gamers winning stuffed animals, the pulsing, rhythmic sounds of bands and bellowing calls at bingo games.

This year, from Friday, September 1 through Monday, September 4 at Roosevelt Center, Greenbelters, their guests and other visitors will experience everything from dizzy-inducing rides, live music stage shows to challenging games and information and artisans’ booths.

Mingling with vibrant sights and sounds, aromas of carnival cuisine will tease savory delights as old and young chins sport mustard smears and ice cream drips. Fair food consumers should be happy knowing food booths pass a county health inspection before their first bite is served.

Crowds of more than 4,000 participants have attended the festival annually. It’s an opportunity to have fun and experience the small town charm of Greenbelt. Visitors have come from Arizona, Wisconsin and New Jersey to reconnect with Greenbelt friends and family. Facebook comments praise the carnival and fair: Elizabeth Moore of Tucson, Ariz., said “seeing friends year after year” appeals to her. Erin Yelenchak of Dunkirk, Md., said she enjoyed being back home and playing bingo while catching up with friends she didn’t see often.

Need a break from the rides? The fair gives local artists of all ages and abilities the chance to share their work with the community. Visit the art and photo displays in the Community Center. At Roosevelt Center, other artists display their handmade crafts such as handbags and baskets, jewelry, pottery and woodcrafts. On Information Day (September 2) organizations across a broad spectrum of topics share their causes and interests, from the American Legion, Lions Club and Astronomical Society of Greenbelt to the Peace & Justice Coalition of Prince George’s County and College Savings Plans of Maryland.

For Helen Beers of Laurel, participation in the festival means keeping tradition going. She said she enjoyed “being able to take my kids and do the things that my mom did with me when I was younger . . . like playing bingo, riding the rides and listening to the oldies but goodies.”

And whether the music is oldies or rhythm and blues, as always the main stage provides a focal point of live entertainment with a four-day line-up of musicians that have included The Nowhere Men, Original Moonlighters and Johnny Seaton and Bad Behavior. Tunes range from Elvis hits to Motown. The bands provide non-stop energy, showmanship and exquisite musicality. To the energetic and those so inclined, band sounds also produce spirited, unique moves from dancers. “You’ve got to be there and feel it,” said Mark Andrews, who first visited last year. “The bands are high-energy partying sources.”

As much as fun is emphasized for the fair, safety of fair participants is always a prime consideration for both rides and the fair environment. Roger Sherwood, owner of Sherwood Amusements, said that before the carnival opens his company “works with state inspectors to ensure all safety and health requirements have been met.” He said, “Our experience and training combine with maintenance and daily inspections to create safe surroundings.”

Interim Greenbelt Police Chief Thomas Kemp, who has been the festival committee police liaison for the past 17 years, said safety considerations are a paramount issue for the police. According to Kemp, 99 percent of fair participants cause no problems. “However, we quickly respond to those who do and manage the situation accordingly.” Kemp said the department’s public safety presence includes directing traffic, staffing the police booth, security foot patrols and public safety information outreach. Additionally, the Greenbelt Police Department will coordinate with emergency first responders and increase safety measures related to concerns associated with mass casualty threats and other related potential disruptions to the festival and parade.

Visit the Labor Day Festival website greenbeltlaborday.com for participation instructions and events and activities schedules. Visit the Labor Day Festival Facebook page facebook.com/greenbeltlabordayfestival for information, photos and to engage in festival conversations. Admission to the fair is free; the only costs are food and beverages, midway games and carnival rides.

Butch Hicks is a Greenbelt resident and a member of the Greenbelt Labor Day Festival Committee.

also appeared to offer support, noting that since two years had already passed, a cohort that might have been able to vote could not.

Smith pointed out that it seemed inconsistent that councilmembers who were reluctant to take action on the matter that night were unable to present any downside to making the change. She noted that almost all of the councilmembers had agreed that this age group was “mature enough” to vote in city elections. “It’s a big change but there’s no negative impact. You all say we’re mature enough to vote. Why not do it?”

Smith also cited Mach’s pointing out that if residents were unhappy that the proposed charter change were adopted, they had the right to petition the charter amendment to a binding referendum vote if they had enough support.

Several people addressed the issue of whether in fact it was more fair and “democratic” to let the voters decide whether residents currently not eligible to vote should be able to do so. In this situation, should officials elected to represent the voters take the lead, or should they follow the lead of the voters? This issue had also received considerable attention at the council worksession on election issues held on July 5.

Smith said that a major reason for elected officials to take the lead on the decision is that, as with other municipalities, turnout for city elections is low, with the result that a relatively small number of people, who are unlikely to be representative of the population of the city, would be making significant decisions.

Jonathan Taylor of Craddock Road thanked the councilmembers who preferred the referendum for allowing residents to participate directly in the decision. He also expressed concern in general about broadening eligibility to vote, suggesting that lowering the voting age might be a gateway event for further changes, such as allowing non-citizen residents to vote. Robert Snyder also supported using the referendum question on the ballot as a basis for decision.

Reverend Ray Rasor of Franklin Park spoke in opposition to the referendum question. He said he was speaking both as a disabled person and as a black man. He said legislation to protect the disabled would never have passed if it had been required to be done by referendum. He added that if it had been left to the voters, African Americans would still not be free people.

Another resident agreed with Raysor, saying “Whenever voting rights were expanded, it was not by referendum.”

Davis agreed, saying, “Adults are reluctant to share their rights sometimes.” She added that if it had been left to a referendum, women might still not have the right to vote. She encouraged voter education efforts and “door to door” contact by both young people and adults before the election.

The resolution to place the advisory referendum question on the ballot will return to council’s September 11 meeting for second reading and a vote to adopt.

Saturday's Power Outage Affected Many Greenbelters

by Jill Connor

On Saturday evening nearly 1,800 households in the Greenbelt area were affected by a power outage, said Pepco Regional Vice President Jerry Pasternak. The outage lasted less than two hours and was caused by downed wires due to a downed tree.

There was a significant storm with thunder and multiple local lightning strikes as well as high winds. Pasternak attributes the short duration of this outage and the general decrease in frequency and duration of outages to the strengthening of infrastructure, improved technology and vegetation management.

Pepco uses an average for their customers called System Average Interruption Frequency Index, which represents how often customers on average experience an interruption in a given year, and System Average Interruption Duration Index, which represents the total time customers on average did not have service in a given year.

These numbers have dropped for the past three years according to Pepco. In 2014 the percentage was 1.27 interruptions. In 2016 the number dropped to 1.08, a 15 percent decrease in interruptions. In 2014, the duration of the interruptions was 126 minutes and in 2016, the number dropped to 108 minutes, a 14 percent decrease in duration.

Although vegetation management is often a tricky conversation in Greenbelt, Pepco and the city council hold multiple meetings to educate the public about when trimming will occur and how much. Pepco will occasionally replant trees that are removed and has a program to plant trees that are height-limited to 30 to 35 feet so they do not interfere with the powerlines.

Overall this was a harmless storm. Greenbelt police reported that nothing of significance occurred except some residential alarms were triggered. The power situation was resolved quickly thanks to the hard work of the crews out there in the storm.

Coming to Build Greenbelt

by James Giese

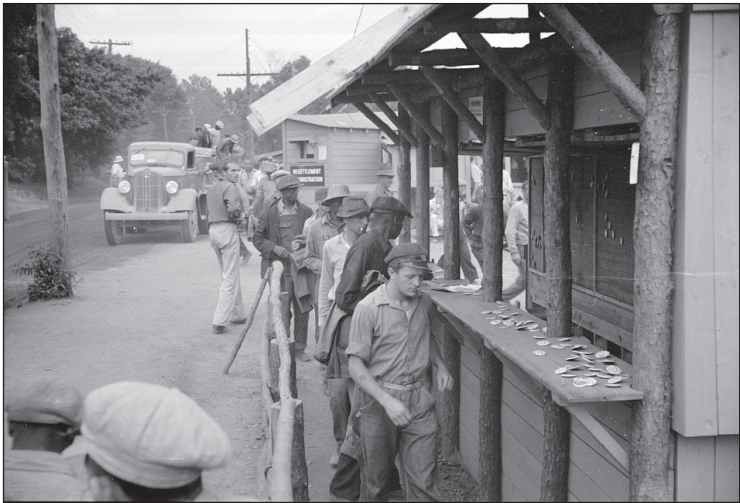

This is the 18th in a series of articles with photos depicting the early history of Greenbelt.

Over 13,000 people worked on the Greenbelt project with as many as 5,000 men brought to the site daily. They came by train from Baltimore and Washington to Branchville. Grace Tugwell, Rexford's wife, helped arrange for the trains in her job with the Resettlement Administration. From the station the men were transported by trucks to the workplace. Longtime Greenbelt resident Bob Dove drove one of these trucks. Special apparatuses were put on the trucks to carry the workers. They were then removed to enable the trucks to be used for construction.

Upon arriving onsite, the men checked in with timekeepers and were issued colored badges. White designated unskilled labor; yellow, semi-skilled; and red, skilled. In November 1935 only 45 of a thousand workers were skilled, but by June 1937 60 percent were skilled.

Another longtime resident, Walsh Barcus, worked as a timekeeper. As such, he had to check on the men at their worksites as well. He said that only one man was difficult to keep track of.

While black men and white are mingled at the timekeepers' shed, the men getting off the first truck, taken at the same time, were all white while the men leaving the second truck were all black. Although the New Deal programs assisted persons of both races, segregation was practiced throughout the country and to a greater extent in the South. Nor were many black men able to gain employment as skilled labor. The numerous photographs taken of men working on the job reflect that disparity.

Places to View the Eclipse

by Jill Connor

Not many Maryland cities are as lucky as Greenbelt to have a resource like the Goddard Visitor Center in their backyard during what might be the most photographed, shared, tweeted and covered event in human history, the total solar eclipse. On Monday afternoon, all Marylanders can look up and see the partial eclipse. The peak of 80 percent totality will take place at 2:42 p.m.

Many Greenbelters are traveling to the path of totality to the south or west of us. The path will traverse 14 states over a 70-mile-wide path.

At Goddard on Monday visitors can bring a lunch, picnic blanket and eclipse-viewing glasses to watch the event. If the parking lot reaches capacity, vehicles will be redirected to an alternative lot and a shuttle bus will transport guests to the visitor center. In case of inclement weather, this event will be canceled. For information about the eclipse, including safety viewing tips, go to <https://eclipse2017.nasa.gov/>.

Many local libraries are also offering Solar Eclipse parties that offer a free pair of eclipse glasses. As of publication, participating libraries in Prince George's County include Bowie, South Bowie, Laurel, Beltsville, Hyattsville, Largo-Kettering, Glenarden, Hillcrest Heights and Upper Marlboro.

Tema Frank will clean and saute mushrooms she picked in Old Greenbelt with onions for her family's dinner. Frank was born in Siberia and raised in Leningrad, now known as St. Petersburg. "Russians love mushrooms," she says. Every summer, families would go to remote villages to hunt for them. In those days before World War II,
